WAS IN A TERRIBLE FIX

A Georgia Woman Tells How She Felt Like She Was Being Killed—Cardui Helped Her.

Pelham, Ga.—"I was in a terrible fix," writes Mrs. E. L. Bigham, of Pelham, Ga. "I was so weak I could hardly walk across the room. I had such pains in my sides and would swell up so I could hardly stand it. I was irregular and could not do my work. My head ached all the time, so bad at times I felt like it would kill me. I also suffered with drawing pains in my legs and my back hurt and I was getting poorer every day, but Cardui got me up and to do my work and I feel better than I have for some time."

"I cannot praise Cardui strongly enough. I will recommend it to all my friends."

As a tonic for weak women, we know of nothing equal to Cardui. It gives strength and ambition, brightens the eyes, clears the complexion, regulates the system and helps you back to a new youthfulness of looks and feeling.

Made from pure vegetable ingredients, it contains no powerful, mineral drugs, or deleterious compounds. Containing no glycerin, or similar material, it has no mawkish, disagreeable taste, and has no possible bad after-effect.

Absolutely harmless, it is good for young and old and should be in every family. Try it.

Unsolved Problems.

Aerostatic artists are on the verge of many things to learn. It is perfectly evident that if they could establish the fact that an aerostatic balancing wheel, in the way of a gyroscope attachment, should be upon the ends of the wings, which it is the present endeavor and apparent necessity of plane builders to make, there might be a grand accomplishment achieved, which at this time the ordinary mechanic seems unable to solve.

Modern Farm Methods As Applied in the South.

Notes of Interest to Planter, Fruit Grower and Stockman

How to Make Mother Hens Out of Surplus Male Birds.

A recent article in your paper told about the superior market value of capons when sold for meat. But the great value of capons in rearing young chicks is a fact of which many people are ignorant. From year to year the poultrymen nurse their flocks, devoting much time to the successful or unsuccessful rearing of little chicks—time that could be more profitably saved and applied elsewhere. When the incubator is nearly ready to hatch, the old brooder is cleaned up, the ever necessary straw and grit must be strewn around, the lamp must be cleaned and filled, and new wick put in. Then begins the watchful care of rearing these little hothouse flowers. The artificial heat must be so arranged that at any moment they may return to it; and they must be kept out of any shower of rain that may, without respect for the best interest of the chicks, descend upon the earth. But, above all else, as they begin to droop and die one by one, and one by two, the disease must be attributed to something else than the brooder method. And when the little delicate things meet with a good, bracing breeze of pure, fresh air, why you may then gather up the remains. I've tried it.

The greatest difference between rearing chicks with the brooders and with capons is about this: With the brooder, when the hatch is over and the chicks are taken from the incubator, the trouble begins. With the capon, when the hatch is over and the chicks are taken from the incubator, the trouble is practically ended. When it is remembered that there is but little trouble encountered in hatching with an incubator, it will be seen that this is saying a good deal.

If my incubator hatches one hundred and twenty chicks, I give them to three capons, i. e., forty chicks to each capon. From that time on the only trouble is that same trouble that would be met with in the attention given to three hens with chicks. Wouldn't you rather have that trouble than the annoyance and vexation of attending one or two brooders? There is yet another consideration. The capon-reared chicks are much stronger and grow much faster than the brooder-reared ones. A comparison on the yards will quickly show this.

To see the old capon strutting around the yard clucking and scratching, followed by a brood of forty chicks that in turn are struggling and scratching for the bugs and worms, is convincing. Then, when night comes on, to see him go into his coop exactly after the manner of an old hen with the little chicks following; and afterward to go and peep into the coop and see him with outstretched wings entirely hovering his brood, and to hear the little sounds of comfort and satisfaction that emanate from some cozy place down beneath those big wings—all of this is very convincing.

I have converted my brooder into a coop where the capon furnishes all of the heat and nursing. He is the lamp, and does not require trimming and filling, and this lamp will follow the little chicks out into the yard to care for them, hovering them when they get cold.

Training the capons to carry the chicks is but little trouble. Swing him until he is drunk and dazed, then put the chicks under him. This should be done at night. Grasp the capon by the legs and swing him over and over about fifty times. Then quickly put him in the coop he is to occupy and put the chicks under him. As he awakes he will begin to hover the chicks in a natural manner and make the peculiar noises of an old hen under similar circumstances. In using a young capon never tried before, it is a good idea to get a small box, just big enough for him to squat in, but not high enough for him to stand erect. Then swing him and put a few chicks in the box, putting him down over them, and a top over the box to mash him into a sitting posture. Be sure to have a few holes for air, and leave him thus without ever looking in for all of one night and the next day. Then the next night take the box to the coop where he is to be kept and put him in with all the chicks to be given him. Leave him in this coop for several days, then he may be allowed the run of the yard.

It is always a good idea to keep a young capon in a run to himself, as all of the other chickens on the yard will whip him, and the commotion thus caused may separate him from his chicks and cause him to leave them. When they are well started they never leave the chicks and never wear them. They must finally be separated at weaning time.

It Happens Every Day.

Grocer Boy: "Yes'm, when they pack 'em they always put the best 'uns at the top."—Chicago Tribune.

A capon will take new ones at any time after being started, and all that is necessary is to go to his coop at night and slip the little ones under him along with the bigger ones. A trial of the capon is all that is necessary to convince.

It is not to be inferred from the above that the capon is useful in rearing chicks hatched only from an incubator. He is especially useful where a man has no incubator and keeps just a few hens. In an instance of this kind the capon will take the chicks hatched by three hens and the hens will more than pay for the feed for both the capon and the little chicks during the two months before weaning time.—Dr. John H. McBee, Lexington, Miss., in Southern Poultry Journal.

Management of Ducks.

"Any calculation as to the return to be expected by those who keep ducks," says an experienced breeder, "depends entirely upon the possession of a suitable locality. They are most likely to be kept with profit when access is allowed them to an adjoining marsh, where they are able in a great measure to provide for themselves; for if wholly dependent upon the breeder for their living, they have such ravenous appetites that they would soon, to use an emphatic expression, 'eat their heads off.' No description of poultry, in fact, will be so much, or feed so greedily. The excursions allowed them must be limited to short distances, or otherwise they will gradually learn to absent themselves altogether, and acquire rather wild habits, so that when they are required to be put up for breeding or immediate sale, they are often found missing, and difficult to find."

"Ducks too early allowed their liberty on large bodies of water, are exposed to so many enemies, both by land and water, that few reach their majority; and, even if some are thus fortunate, they are not disposed afterward to return to the farmyard and submit quietly to regular habits. They may be kept in health in small enclosures, by a good system of management, though we fear with very little, if any, profit, which is the point to which all advice must tend. There is no doubt that ducks may be made profitable as egg producers, but the quality of their eggs, and the extra labor required to obtain them (for unless they are put up every night many of them will not be found), will not allow them to compete with the hen in that capacity. Also, a duck lays when eggs are most plentiful, while hens' eggs must be procured at all seasons."

Feed For Poultry.

We are inclined to place corn at the head of the list of grains, but to feed all corn, unless the flock has unlimited range and needs but little grain of any kind, would cause egg production to cease in a short time. Corn and plenty of green feed and a range rich in insects, make a first-class egg food, but where the hens are shut up, corn should not make more than one-third the grain feed. The remainder should be made up of wheat, oats and bran in about equal proportions, and most of the corn that is fed during the year should be given during the six cold months.

But a diet of grain alone will not stimulate egg production. With it must be given other foods, such as milk, meat scraps, crushed bone, green cut bone, if it is to be had, ground shells and plenty of green feed in the shape of grass and other green stuff in the summer, and raw chopped vegetables in the winter.

It is impossible to say how this should be fed. Give a little of each kind often, and it will be found pretty hard to feed the bones so much that they will get overfat. With all the talk about overfeeding hens, one fact has been impressed upon us. It is almost impossible to get a hen fat while she is laying regularly. This applies to all the non-sitting breeds and to the American class. It would probably apply to the Langshans also. The weight of evidence indicates that lack of variety is the principal cause of non-production of eggs in any flock.

Pasture For Sows.

The sows need plenty of pasture, first of all, clover, alfalfa, cowpeas, soy beans or rape if possible, in addition to the grass. Then they should have a rather nitrogenous grain ration. Mill feeds are probably the best, as they do not tend to constipate. Some corn may be fed on the ear. After farrowing feed for two or three days principally on milk or bran slops with a little corn and plenty of green stuff.

Silence!

The instinct of modesty natural to every woman is often a great hindrance to the cure of womanly diseases. Women shrink from the personal questions of the local physician which seem indelicate. The thought of examination is abhorrent to them, and so they endure in silence a condition of disease which curiously progresses from bad to worse.

It has been Dr. Pierce's privilege to cure a great many women who have found a refuge for modesty in his offer of FREE consultation by letter. All correspondence is held as sacredly confidential. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.
